

Waxwing Bombycilla garrulus

(Breeds northern regions of Europe and North America).

The Waxwing is an eruptive migrant from Scandinavia which invades Britain and Ireland in those years when the berry harvest fails in Northern Europe. It used to come roughly in a ten-year cycle. It was not until the winter of 1849 that the Waxwing appeared in any numbers in Ireland. There was none reported from Northern Ireland during the British invasions of 1866 and 1872, but it was during the invasion of 1892, it was first reported from Co. Armagh. In 1903, 1913, 1923, 1946 and 1954. Waxwings arrived in Northern Ireland in considerable numbers and in the irruption of 1963 in which a large number invaded the country, a flock of 75 birds were seen feeding on the berries of a Cotoneaster tree in a garden at Shandon Park, Belfast. So many berries were being dropped by the birds it was like "red rain", Deane 1965c. Some further details may be read in Deane 1983. Other occurrences in Northern Ireland prior to 1954 are to be found in Kennedy, Rutledge & Scroope 1954.
